CHALLENGE FOR A SCIENTIST

In a time men called the beginning there was unbridled light, too pure.
too intense for any but God's eyes.
A time of mass and matter, warring and waiting— His playthings—molded and willed and flung from dawn to forever.

When you crack creation's codes,
when you tell us in detail how Earth and Life happened, when you prove it was no accident, teach us the WHY.

Locate the lost language of holiness, discover synonyms for praise. Give us new words, wrested from granite, born burning, tempered on glaciers,
cut and polished with diamonds.

To be spoken by men in whispers.
